Q59. Which of the following is an appropriate statement in regard to operation of a distributed system?

a) A dedicated administrator is assigned in the same manner as in a centralized system to manage common resources such as databases.

b) An administrator is not assigned at each site; instead, the users involved in operation are thoroughly educated, and operation is left to the users.

c) The extent of user responsibilities is made clear, and each user is able to manage the network configuration.

d) The information resources are distributed, so a malicious network intrusion is not likely to happen, and the workload of security management is relatively low.
